

Acknowledgments

Here at Drumlummon Views, we remain grateful to three groups of generous folks, those who support our efforts financially, those who volunteer their time and wisdom, and those who contribute their stories, poems, essays, reviews, images, and ideas to enrich each issue. Without them Drumlummon Views and Drumlummon Institute itself could not, and would not, exist.

To see a complete listing of our financial supporters, visit the Drumlummon Institute home page (www.drumlummon.org) and click on Drumlummon's Funders. Our volunteer supporters are too legion to list here, but three groups deserve our utmost gratitude: first, our hardworking Board of Directors, Jeff Williams, Matt Pavelich, Niki Whearty, and Rennan Rieke; second, the knowledgeable members of our Board of Advisors (on the DI home page, click on Drumlummon Board of Advisors); and third, Drumlummon Views' contributing editors, who come up with many of our story ideas and indeed contribute their own work to DV (see the journal's masthead). The writers, thinkers, and artists—from many different disciplines—who share their marvelous efforts in DV's pages provide the journal's lifeblood; you will find their names in this issue's Table of Contents and their biographies in our contributors' notes.

Our gratitude, too, goes to the following individuals and institutions who have helped in myriad ways: Chere Justo and Christine Brown, Montana Preservation Alliance; the entire staff of the Montana Historical Society Research Center; Liz Gans and Marcia Eidel, Holter Museum of Art; Barbara Koostra and Manuela Well-Off-Man, Montana Museum of Art and Culture; Debbie Miller, Minnesota Historical Society; Julian Cox, High Museum of Art; Jennifer A. Gately, Portland Art Museum; Wes Mills; Rudy, Lela, and Chris Autio; G. B. Carson; Patricia Forsberg and Stephen Speckart; and the many others who have offered us story ideas, moral support, and good cheer. We are especially grateful to Jodi Schmitz, the editorial intern from Carroll College who contributed mightily to moving this issue—and all our projects—forward.

Finally, our thanks go to Geoff Wyatt of Wyatt Design, Drumlummon Views' Art Director, who has once again designed DV so beautifully.
